THE WIRELESS SOURCE NAMED 'GLOBAL TRADER OF THE YEAR'

Recognized by Automation Alley for Promoting Innovative U.S. Products and Services Worldwide

CHICAGO, IL (October 26, 2011) –The Wireless Source, a global leader in small electronics recycling and trade-in program management, announced today it was the recipient of Automation Alley's prestigious 'Global Trader of the Year' award.

The Wireless Source, a Clover Holdings company, was founded in 1999 and is headquartered in Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, with offices in New York, Oregon, Minnesota and Toronto. The company offers innovative private label solutions for in-store and on-line trade-in and recycling programs for retailers, OEMs, businesses and charities. Services include the recycling of cell phones, laptops, net books, GPS devices, e-readers, digital cameras, MP3 players and many other categories of consumer electronics.

"This is a tremendous honor for our company. This recognition demonstrates the global acceptance and impact of our industry-leading trade-in and recycling solutions," said Bob Sullivan, President of The Wireless Source.

Automation Alley is Michigan's largest technology business association that looks to drive growth and economic development through workforce and business development initiatives. The 'Global Trader of the Year' award recognizes a small-to-medium company or organization based in Southeast Michigan that has successfully promoted innovative U.S. products, services and/or technologies worldwide. The Wireless Source exports to China, Vietnam, Australia, Mexico and Latin American countries and provides services to more than 7,500 retail locations, 300 corporations and many charities and individuals. The company has also been awarded the 'Export Excellence' award from the U.S. Department of Commerce and was recently named as one of the 'Michigan 50 Companies to Watch' for 2010.
